Preface

Saigon – Ho Chi Minh City, with over 300 years of history, has been building a new society for more than a quarter of century since Vietnam regained total independence and reunification.

Looking back at the traveled path, the city residents cannot but feel proud of their achievements. However, the greater pride they take, the more responsibilities they must assume to build Ho Chi Minh City into a more beautiful and advanced metropolis, living up to the expectations of their fellow countrymen and friends around the world.

Their course ahead is wide but filled with many difficulties and challenges. To fulfill the expectations and dreams of the municipal inhabitants entering these early years of the 21st century, more determination, creativity, and concerted efforts from each and every inhabitant, particularly the youth, from fellow countrymen in other parts of the country, and from overseas Vietnamese and friends around the world are required. For the sake of the future of the city, joint efforts are called for such that the city will always deserve being named after the much beloved Uncle Ho.
